MONDAY, JANUARY 14, 1861. It will be seen from our Indianapol correspondence that a joint resolution applying to Congress under the Fifth Article of the Constitution to call a National Convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution has been introduced into the Legislature of Indiana. This is a step in the right direction, and should be promptly followed up hy the adoption of the resolution. We trust it will be. And we hope the Legislature of Kentucky, which meets next Thursday, will make the same application among the very first of its acts, and at the same time call a Convention of the Border States. Such is the line of action recommended unanimously by the two Conventions that assembled here last week, and we do not doubt that the policy commands the cordial approval of a perfectly overwhelming majority of the citizens of the Commonwealth. Let it be carried out with decision, with dignity, and, if possible, with unhroken harmony.

We publish below a communication to Governor Magoslin from the hand of the ennever be less is our heartfelt prayer:

This, the most popular of all the national songs of America, was written by Judge Joseph Hopkinson, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. It was written in the summer of 1798, when a war with France was thought to be inevitable; Congress then being in session at Philadelphia. The thealry was the Congress than being in session at Philadelphia. inevitable; Congress then being in session at Philadelphia. The thea're was then open there, and a young actor, a schoolmale of Hopkinson, heing about to take a benelit, asked the Judge to compose for him some words to the tune of the 'Tresi-pose for him some words to the tune of the 'Tresi-pose for him some words to the tune of the 'Tresi-pose for him some words to the tune of the 'Tresi-pose for him some words to the tune of the 'Tresi-pose for him some words to the tune of the 'Tresi-pose for him some words to the tune of the 'Tresi-pose for him some words to the tune of the 'Tresi-pose for him some words to the tune of the 'Tresi-pose for him some words to the tune of the 'Tresi-pose for him some words to the tune of the tun dent's March," which was then the popular air.
This was on Saturday; on the Menday night fellowing the song was ready, was song with great

As the Judge, writing of this song in 1840, said of it, "it was traly American, and nething else; and the patriotic feelings of every American heart responded to it."

We should add here that the tune itself—
"President's March"—was composed in 1789, by

We consider, now, that we have made out n prefty fair pedigree for "Hail Columbia," and one of which no one born en American mil has any reason to be ashamed.

The origin of "The Star Spangled Banner," as a national song, is less nacient, but hardly less richly fraught with patriotic associations than the others we have been treating of. Its history is

Even though the thing taught may be but the poor damb animal who bears the hurdens, as he has hitherto borne the stripes of men, the illustration loses nothing of its vital force. It is an evidence that even the humbler intelligences are not alien from human sympathy. They repel an evidence that even the humbler intelligences me not alien from human sympathy. They repel violence with violence, rage with rage, but intelligently wrought upon they return affection for kindness, and yield to gentle firmness that obedience which they deny to brutal force.

Rarey has practically emancipated the horse from a degrading tyranny. He has elevated the tutelage and instruction of that animal into necessary. His theory that hefere the horse converted the transfer of the horse converted the horse converted to the horse converted the horse converted the horse converted to the horse converted the horse converted to cience. His theory that before the horse can ra-ionally be expected to do anything, it is necessary for him to have some faint perception of Kunuwha Salt Agent. What it is that he is desired to do, is not incretly plansible, but so manifestly sound and correct that General France nod Praylston Bruk plausible, but so manifestly sound and correct that it is a wonder it has not before been advanced and put in practice.

It is not necessary to recapitulate here the frequent and triumphant vindications which that theory has met at his hands. He has encountered and sabdned the most violent examples of equine demoralization and vice to be found in Europe or Asia. The laurance which he addresses to the conditional of the condition of the conditio Asia. The language which he addresses to them heing that of gentleness and sympathy, is, of coarse, universal—understood as well by the vicious "Arabs" of the Syrian desort as by the spinoaly Carron of the Syrian desort as by the spinoaly Carron of the Syrian desort as by the spinoaly Carron of the Syrian desort as by the spinoaly Carron of the Syrian desort as by the spinoaly Carron of the Syrian desort as by the spinoaly Carron of the Syrian desort as by the spinoaly Carron of the Syrian desort as by the spinoaly Carron of the Syrian desort as by the spinoaly Carron of the Syrian desort as by the spinoaly Carron of the Syrian desort as by the spinoaly Carron of the Syrian desort as by the spinoaly Carron of the Syrian desort as by the spinoal of t

We do not see what is to prevent Mr. Rarey from taking his place among the great reformers.
He has done for the horse what John Howard did for the prisoner. All we have to do, to fully recognize the great value which the inaugaration and general recognition of the Rareyan system will be to the race, is to consider for a moment the important part which the horse ements in the great drama of civilization. The animal having no means of ventilating his own merits, we are accommended by the standard power of the horse of the horse of the horse is first. He is installigences, the horse is first. He is installigences is installigences, the rntal disregard of his capacitation is known only to the horse himself.
